Bluebonnet Trails Community Services

Building strong relationships with community stakeholders early is integral to a sustainable and successful Parents as Teachers program. By connecting with coalitions and like-minded organizations, programs can better achieve their mission and most importantly, better address the needs of the families they serve. Intentional community partnerships allow programs to spread the word, in their communities and beyond, that Parents as Teachers strengthens families and prepares children for success in school and beyond.

The TXPAT State Office knows just how important intentional partnerships are and we were excited to learn that last month, the Bastrop ISD Board of Trustees honored one of our very own Texas affiliates, Bluebonnet Trails Community Services. They were honored for their commitment to children and families through partnerships in the Bastrop community.

Brenda Frizzell (pictured above), Director of Early Childhood Developmental Services and Christopher Lott (pictured above), Program Manager of the Parents as Teachers program in Bastrop County, were honored to accept this recognition.

Bluebonnet Trails has a long history of providing high quality integral health services. The Parents as Teachers program is their newest initiative and it is growing quickly. During the 2018-2019 program year, the organization offered 43 families much needed support, while positioning themselves as a direct resource to the local school district by offering teen parent support programs.

Happy Trails to you, Bluebonnet Trails!
Keep up the good work!
